PG Diploma cheat sheet for advocates and law students

IT Act 2000 and the 2008 amendment, IT Rules, CERT-In directions, DPDP Act and Rules, BNS, BNSS and BSA, and the landmark cases. Law stated as at 5 November 2026.

Read this first. Unmarked statements are ones I am confident in: recent developments were cross-checked against current sources in November 2026, and long-settled points (such as classic case holdings) rest on established knowledge. [verify] marks points that rest on memory, where sources conflict, or where the law is moving. Check those against the bare Act, the Gazette notification or the law report before you cite them. This sheet is AI-assisted study material, not legal advice.

The headline issue

Unauthorised access to a computer or device. Section 43 of the IT Act is the civil contravention: no dishonest or fraudulent intent needed, remedy is compensation. Section 66 is the criminal offence: the same acts, but only when done dishonestly or fraudulently, with imprisonment up to 3 years, a fine up to ₹5 lakh, or both. The next page has the full comparison.

Section 43 versus Section 66: unauthorised access

Point	Section 43 (civil)	Section 66 (criminal)
Nature	Contravention. The person is liable to pay damages by way of compensation to the person affected.	Offence. Prosecuted by the State after investigation.
What triggers it	Any act in clauses (a) to (j), done without the permission of the owner or any other person in charge of the computer, system or network.	Any act referred to in s.43, done dishonestly or fraudulently. Section 66 borrows its acts from s.43.
Mental element	No dishonest or fraudulent intent is an ingredient of clauses (a) to (i). Authority (permission) is the pivot. Clause (j) is different: it expressly requires an intention to cause damage. [verify] on scope-of-authority disputes, which are fact heavy.	Mens rea is essential. 'Dishonestly' is defined in IPC s.24 (intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another), now BNS s.2(7). 'Fraudulently' is defined in IPC s.25 (intention to defraud, but not otherwise), now BNS s.2(9). The Act's explanation still names the IPC sections; read them as the BNS equivalents [verify].
Consequence	Compensation. The 2000 text capped it at ₹1 crore; the 2008 amendment removed the cap.	Imprisonment up to 3 years, or fine up to ₹5 lakh, or both. (2000 text, headed 'hacking': up to 3 years or ₹2 lakh.)
Forum	Adjudicating Officer under s.46 for claims up to ₹5 crore; above that, the competent civil court (s.46(1A)). Appeals under s.57 now go to TDSAT [verify].	Investigation by a police officer not below Inspector (s.78). Trial before the Magistrate. Cognizable and bailable (s.77B and published Lok Sabha tables).
Compounding	Not applicable.	Compoundable under s.77A, with limits for repeat offenders, offences against women or children, and offences of a socio-economic nature [verify].
Parallel liability	Section 77: compensation or penalty under the Act does not bar any other punishment.	The same facts can also attract BNS offences such as theft (s.303), cheating (s.318), or criminal breach of trust (s.316). Courts differ on how far the IT Act displaces general penal law (see Digumarti under Landmark cases).

The acts listed in section 43

Without permission of the owner or person in charge, a person: (a) accesses or secures access to the computer, system, network or resource; (b) downloads, copies or extracts data, including from removable storage; (c) introduces a computer contaminant or virus; (d) damages the computer, data or programmes; (e) disrupts it; (f) denies access to an authorised person; (g) assists another to access in contravention of the Act; (h) charges services to another's account by tampering; (i) destroys, deletes or alters information, or diminishes its value or utility; (j) steals, conceals, destroys or alters source code with an intention to cause damage.

Related sections

- s.65 tampering with computer source documents (knowingly or intentionally concealing, destroying or altering source code that must be kept by law): up to 3 years, or fine up to ₹2 lakh, or both.
- s.66B to 66F receiving a stolen computer resource, identity theft, cheating by personation, privacy violation, cyber terrorism (see the offences table).
- s.66A struck down in Shreya Singhal (2015) and formally omitted by the Jan Vishwas Act 2023 [verify] on the omission. Never cite it as a charge; the Supreme Court directed that nobody be prosecuted under it.
- s.75 the Act applies to offences or contraventions committed outside India by any person if the act involves a computer, system or network located in India.
- s.84B, 84C abetment, and attempt (up to half of the longest term for the offence).

CyberWithMadhav | Madhav Pandya

Security testing and research. Written authorisation from the owner removes the "without permission" element of s.43 and defeats the dishonest or fraudulent intent s.66 needs. Keep the scope letter, IP ranges, dates and named testers. My reading is that the IT Act has no express good-faith security research safe harbour [verify].

Exam traps

- Section 43 is not a 'hacking offence'. It is a civil contravention. Hacking as an offence is s.66.
- Section 66 has no free-standing definition. Always read it with s.43.
- Compensation under s.43 is uncapped since 2008, but the Adjudicating Officer only hears claims up to ₹5 crore.
- Section 43A (compensation for failure to protect sensitive personal data) is scheduled to be omitted when DPDP s.44(2) commences, around 13 May 2027 (18 months from 13 Nov 2025).

Section 63(1) treats information in an electronic record (printed, stored, copied or recorded from a computer or communication device) as a document admissible without proof of the original, if the conditions in s.63(2) are met. Under s.63(4) a certificate in the prescribed Schedule must accompany it. Part A is completed by the party or person in charge of the device and Part B by an expert. The hash value and the hash algorithm are stated in both parts. This is stricter than s.65B, which needed no hash value and no expert.
Practice: hash at acquisition (for example SHA-256), keep the original device, document chain of custody, and obtain both parts of the certificate.

Pune Bar Association v Union of India (W.P.(C) 599 of 2026, decided 22 May 2026): the Supreme Court upheld s.63(4) and the Schedule as having a rational nexus with authenticity, and held that Part B can also be signed by persons with special expertise in computer science and cyber forensics, not only Examiners notified under IT Act s.79A. It disagreed with the Madras High Court view that only s.79A Examiners may sign, said that view is not binding precedent, but did not express a conclusive opinion and left the question of law open.
